Getting to Know Howe

ust imagine a building that could talk and think. Imagine all the people it would know and all the memories it could tell. With 44 years of life in it Howe High School holds a lot of memories.

Howe is a school of history and tradition, but each year is different. This year it was fear of the school closing which distinguished the year from others. As students, parents, graduates, and outsiders fought to keep Howe open, it became obvious that Howe was important to many and was more than just an old building.

The Hornets strive for excellence. They are climbing close to the top in sports, music, foreign language, and art by dedicating their time and talents to Howe.

Jeana Nikirk tries to overcome boredom in the controversial senior guidance class.

Senior guidance?

Waste of class time," "boring and stupid," "waste of counselors"—comments like these can be heard from almost any senior while on the subject of senior guidance.

The class was started for the purpose of helping the upperclassmen to figure out what to do after high school. However, controversy over the course has caused mixed feelings on the part of both teachers and students. "Much of the time is spent socializing instead of learning," stated Michele Hawkins, who—like other students—feels that the class is a waste of time. Director of guidance John Trinkle commented, "Senior guidance is worth the students' time because it helps them to improve their lives and plan for the future."

In a survey taken by senior guidance classes, over half of the students were against senior guidance and felt that the class is a waste of time. "The curriculum is such that there is absolutely no challenge to the mind," commented Elaine Calhoon. "Even speakers tend to get a bit 'old' at times because they all begin to sound alike."

According to the questionnaire most students think that their time is being used unwisely in senior guidance. But students now have more of a chance to talk with their counselors and on a daily basis. Regularly the counselors are only able to see one or two students during one period, but senior guidance enables the counselors to see from 25 to 30 students at a time and give them the information that they need.

College-bound seniors feel that senior guidance has kept them informed on application and scholarship deadlines. Eddie West commented, "If it weren't for senior guidance I may have forgotten deadlines."

"Senior guidance let me think about what to do after high school," explained Joyce Pottorff. "If we didn't have the class, I would probably not have taken the time to think about it."

Rettig finds art

A sk any art teacher at Howe to name the most successful or talented art student and he will probably answer, "Chris Rettig,"

As a senior Chris has received many awards, most of which were acquired during his freshman and junior years. Most important have been a first place in the Indianapolis 500 Art Festival and several awards in the nationwide Scholastic Art Contest.

Included in his achievements is a scholarship from John Herron School of Art, where Chris took a summer precollege workshop. This, along with his awards and some of his work, will contribute to his future in the field of commercial or graphic art.

Many art students feel that their talent comes naturally or is just something that they were born with. But Chris explains, "I don't know if I have any natural ability, but I do practice when I can to better my talent."

Although it seems that someone with such a talent would have been interested in art since the day he could hold a pencil, Chris didn't even know he had any artistic abilities until he got to high school and was discovered by art teacher James Lynch. Before then "art was just a class to get me a couple extra credits," explains Chris.

Not only does Chris use his art ability in class but he also carries it on as a hobby. His other hobbies include lapidary and printing. Chris also enjoys camping and hiking.

Among the many different types of art, Chris prefers sketching as his favorite. "I either sketch alone somewhere or in class with some of the people I grew up with," commented Chris.

Chris has had a lot of help from teachers and friends and feels that both have a great influence on his talents and abilities. "Without them I could not have done a lot of things," he explains.

Seniors go broke

Osts continue to rise in everything gas, bills, debts, etc. Senior goods are no exception. The price of senior dues is now stable at $6.00, but senior pictures have risen to $45.00 and up.

For the graduation ceremony the traditional cap and gown may vary in cost. A price of $15.00 will cover the charge for the cap and gown, but the student must return it unless he buys the flimsier outfit for $8.50. An extra touch for the graduating senior is announcements starting at $4.00 or the popular memory book costing $5.20.

Not only do students buy an assortment of graduation merchandise but they seem to be expected to purchase other things too. Mike Petry commented, "When you become a senior your parents usually expect you to buy your own clothes and pay for ear insurance, especially if you have a decent job."

Accepting responsibility with finances is a part of being a senior. But expenses do accumulate even if parents are paying some. (SHARON NEWTON)

Girls behind guns?

In early 1980 President Jimmy Carter reinstated the draft-for men. With the possible passing of the Equal Rights Amendment, controversy arose about whether women should be included in the draft.

Many people feel that ERA has gotten out of hand. Most people think that there should be equal pay for men and women who work at the same job. But having women play professional football and fight in wartime situations is taking it a bit too far. Most would agree with Debbie Hurst that "we should make it equal pay amendment" instead of the more general Equal Rights Amendment.

But what do Howe students, who'll have to live with Congress' decision, feel about ERA and the possibility of being drafted? "I don't think it's fair because I don't care for ERA. The women who are talking about ERA today are older, 45-50. When the war comes along, they're not going to be drafted. I am!" says Debbie Hurst angrily.

Some people have no arguments about women being drafted. Laura Day states, "Women are as capable of handling combat situations as men." But only time will tell if ERA is passed and if indeed women will be drafted. If it is, then most people will feel the same way as Steve Wiles: "They should get all the rights of men, not just some."

Janes tours France

once a student gets into high school, it is a good idea to get involved in everything he can. One person who has definitely done this is Nancy Janes. Nancy has been involved in many activities ranging from the band, orchestra, and National Honor Society to the track team. Nancy has been active not only in school but out of school as well. She was involved with the all-state band and orchestra, the McDonald's All-American Band, and the I.U. Honors Program which enabled her to go to France over the summer.

When she found out she had been chosen for the trip to France, she was very excited. "This had been my goal since sixth grade when my French teacher told the class how great and worthwhile the program was. So I worked for six years hoping that one day I could participate in the program," remarked Nancy. That day came and she left for France on June 18 for her eight-week stay.

In France she lived with a French family and went to a French school and spoke no English during her stay. Even when she met her family, she couldn't speak English. "Any attempt sounded so awkward it sounded like a foreigner trying to learn a new language," explains Nancy. Even now she sometimes thinks and dreams in French. Nancy wants to go into the diplomatic field, where hopefully she can use her knowledge of France and the French people.

But until she graduates from college she will continue doing the things she likes to do like playing the flute, piccolo and piano; participating in sports; writing to the friends she has made all over the world; and speaking French.

Class a success

As president of the senior class, I have been very excited about the willingness of the class to work. Students at Howe have so many outside interests that apathy has been spreading rapidly. It seems that there is always something more important than deciding what the class colors will be or what band will play at the prom, but there was always someone there to make these decisions and to do many other even less glorious tasks. Even though we never won a football homecoming, this class has been a super success.

'Brain' has fun too hat Howe senior has participated in the city-wide soap box derby? Which senior has gotten straight A's all through high school and will be valedictorian of her class? And who hates to be considered a brain? Michele Hawkins.

When asked about her exceptional grades, Michele exclaims, "Grades don't really mean anything unless I learn something. It wasn't my goal to get all A's. After my freshman year it was expected from me."

"I don't think about being valedictorian. Sometimes it makes me feel special, but I would never volunteer the information to anyone." Michele continues, "I hate being considered a brain. I have fun like everyone else. I just do my work."

She has also been active in many Howe activities. She has been vice-president of the senior class, news editor for the "Tower," and a member of the National Honor Society. She has also participated on the track team and was most improved athlete in cross country in 1980.

Besides her achievements at school she has also earned other important awards. She has received the Daughters of the American Revolution citizenship award, an American Legion award, and the Quill and Scroll Golden Scroll award for "Tower."

Michele isn't active only at school. She has competed in the soap box derby and won the Indianapolis championship in 1978. Although she doesn't race anymore, she helps her younger sister Sandy race.

Most of her summers were spent praticing for soap box but she has other hobbies as well. "I love to draw and play euchre, especially in senior guidance." She also likes to go shopping and watch movies.

Michele has applied to the University of Notre Dame and plans to study English.

Known best for her running accomplishments, Rhonda Thomas is talented in other sports as well.

Thomas excels in sports

Rhonda Thomas is not just an exceptional distance runner but has been involved in other school activities. She was in the Letterman's Club, the National Honor Society, and the French Club and she is also assistant alumni secretary of the class of '81.

Rhonda thinks of running almost as a hobby. She enjoys running, especially distances of four miles or more. Anyone who could win the city title in cross country, be a runner-up in the city in the mile, and receive an all-state honorable mention is definitely one who enjoys running very much.

Rhonda doesn't run much on her own time because she is involved in three sports each year and she feels she needs the rest. She runs cross country from the start of August to October, when basketball starts. While the finals of basketball are going on, the conditioning for track begins.

She plans to attend Indiana Central University and major in business administration. Of course, she wants to stay active in track, basketball, and some other type of sport since Indiana Central doesn't offer girls' cross country.

Robbie Jacob outpoints his opponent in the first round of the city tournament.

Jacob claims title

I t takes a lot of dedication and hard work to become a city champion. Four-year wrestler Robbie Jacob was willing to contribute both.

According to wrestling coach Jim Arvin, "Robbie is dedicated to wrestling, school, and himself. He knows his limitations and abilities and works to improve himself." These qualities and the fact that he is an exceptionally talented wrestler were the main ingredients in Robbie's achievements.

Wrestling isn't the easiest sport to participate in because of the time and energy that go into it. A wrestler has to spend time not only at school to prepare for competition but also at home watching his diet and stayin in condition.

Besides physical preparation, mental preparation is involved as well. Before competing, Robbie usually concentrates on his moves and building his confidence. According to coach Arvin, "Robbie is a very positive person. He has confidence in his abilities and knows he will do the best he possibly can."

Since wrestling takes so much mental and physical preparation, one may wonder why a wrestler participates in this sport. Robbie explains, "I like the sport and the feeling of accomplishment that I get from it. It feels good to accomplish something that you've worked hard for."

A fear of heights is just one of the many phobias a student could have.

Martians are here

There are literally hundreds of different phobias. If you're wondering what a phobia is, just think of a fear you have. It is probably some sort of phobia.

A phobia is a fear of an object or situation in which you become scared or sometimes terror-stricken. For example, Fred Guthrie explains, "My greatest fear as a sophomore is going out with the opposite sex. Now that I have a car I don't know what to say to someone I'd like to go out with."

Some fears or phobias are very common among teenagers, but few know it because they are rarely talked about. One common fear is explained by junior Jeff King: "I have the fear that if I'm ever in an accident I might not have clean underwear on."

Other common phobias are fear of heights, elevators, closed-in places, and death. Many share the same fear which Tony Poynter has, the fear of being held, tied down or trapped where he can not move.

At times everyone is faced with some harmful or painful situation which brings on a temporary feeling of fear or anxiety. Mike Schlebecker says that every time he goes down in his basement he is faced with a fear that makes him run up the stairway. "I don't know why because I've been down there and I know nothing's there, but I'm still struck with fear." This type of fear is a perfectly natural reaction and can actually be helpful because it gives one the necessary energy to fight or run from danger.

Many phobias are due to some frightening experience that has taken place in childhood and has later been forgotten. Others, but few, are caused by severe emotional shock in adult life.

Junior Karen Long experienced an unpleasant situation when she got home late one night. She now explains, "I fear my parents when I come home at 4:00 a.m."

Most childhood fears gradually fade as the child gets older, but in some cases they don't. "When I was little I was afraid Martians would attack me in my bedroom. Now I'm afraid to go to scary movies because I get too scared," comments Tom Hilton. The most common childhood fear, fear of dark, is one which usually disappears but in one case hasn't. Lynette Enz says she's afraid of being the last one to go to bed or first to get up. "I don't like to turn the lights off or on in the dark," she explains.

(JACKIE SKAGGS)

Preppy look in

High school girls dressed in the casual, preppy look in 1980-1981. Many girls dressed up for school every day and dressed down for dates or other activities. In the past most girls have dressed down for school and dressed up for other occasions.

The crew-neck sweater was the most popular sweater. It could be worn with blouses in pastels, plaids, or vertical stripes with a matching ribbon tied in a bow around the collar. A blazer jacket might have been added with this combination. "I like it because it's warm and it's in style," commented sophomore Amy Stewart.

The most common pants were tailored cords, tweed slacks, and baggies. But the most popular pants were the designer jeans which could be recognized by the fancy stitching on the pockets.

Dresses lost popularity to knee-length skirts. Plaid and tweed skirts made of a wool-like material were worn most. Students wore plaid skirts with matching socks and flat shoes such as penny loafers and Docksides. Tweed skirts were worn with anklestrap sandals.

Why is it so important to dress up daily? Many students think like Tammy Ragsdale: "Dressing up makes me feel good about myself and I like to make good impressions on others."

Students eat cheap

Everyone has a favorite food whether it be foreign or American. When Howe students were asked what their favorite food was, most preferred foreign food over American with Italian being most popular. Pizza is the favorite among teenagers because of its convenience and economy. Pizza is a good food to have at parties with any ingredients one desires.

Mexican food was the second most popular with foods like chile and burritos. Lori Baker commented that tacos were one of her favorites.

Not everyone likes Italian or Mexican food. Beth DaVee commented, "Chinese is my favorite food because of the way it is cooked." Beth said that she preferred to go to Benihana's where the meal is prepared right at the table.

Hamburgers were the least expensive favorite of the American foods. Steak is a favorite of the more extravagant. Luke Hale commented, "I like steak because it tastes better than broccoli." He also explained that the best steak he has ever eaten was at the Gulf Coast Room at Disney World.

There are a variety of foods from foreign to American. Everyone has at least one favorite whether it be extravagant, inexpensive, or full of delicious calories.

(DEBBIE ROZEK)

Junk food junkies

Do you ever find yourself eating a piece of candy when there are fruits, vegetables and other nutritious foods in the refrigerator wasting away? If so, you may fall under the category of a Junk Food Junkie.

A junkie is one who consumes basically the types of foods that keep the sugar level up and the nutrition level down. Not only does the junkie eat these foods but he also depends on them to make it through the day much like the way an alcoholic needs a drink. Why he eats these types of foods no one knows; but Darren Lundsford, an admitted junkie, says he eats them because they taste better than the more nutritious foods.

The junkie may start his day with breakfast of a soft drink and a Hostess cupcake or two. By the time lunch rolls around the junkie has devoured the bag of potato chips he had tucked away in his locker. For lunch he may obtain a sandwich, a glass of punch, and a piece of pie or cake. He drinks the punch, eats the cake and nibbles at the sandwich. After school he goes directly to the nearest drugstore, where he purchases three or four candy bars to aid in filling his appetite until supper. At supper he picks through the main dishes and plunges into dessert.

Later that night, while doing his homework or watching TV, he decides to have a soft drink and some cookies to halt his hunger pains until he goes to sleep only to dream of a land where only sweets exist.

(DENNIS BAILEY)

Hungry?

I'm hungry! Let's go eat," is a statement heard often after a basketball or football game. A popular place for Howe students is Pizza Hut. When asked why she went to Pizza Hut Rachelle Hudson replied, "I don't know. I just like their pizza. They have a nice little jukebox that you can listen to and there is always someone there from the band." Noble Roman's is popular for about the same reasons.

Also, hungry Howe students are usually rambunctious. They like to make lots of noise and have fun. If a place doesn't serve good food and let the loud Howe students make a little noise, then they won't go to it.

However, many couldn't care less where they go as long as it serves good food. "We went to get a pizza. After we decided to go out, Pizza Hut was the first place we saw," explained Luke Hale.

The main reason Howe students go out is explained by Lisa Walters, "I go to Pizza Hut because that's where everybody goes and where everybody hangs out."

Space invades machines

What will a quarter buy? A quarter will buy you a few minutes of fun on an electronic game. And now more then ever a lot of quarters are being spent on playing these games.

Some people seem to be addicted and can't stop playing them, "I think they're fun. Besides they're challenging," explained Hayley Sams. But on the other hand there are people like senior Mike Moore, who says, "Those games are a complete waste of time and money."

It really doesn't matter what you think about these machines. There will always be someone who is willing to spend a quarter and go into a fantasy world where he can gun down invaders, blast asteroids before they destroy him, or just save the universe from destruction. And if you choose to play these games, good luck and may the force be with you.

Students favor foreign cars

Somewhere in the back of everyone's mind he has a dream car. This car could be seen anywhere—on television, in a magazine or book, or a car that passed him when he was out.

People's dream cars range considerably. Most dream cars are the small foreign models that zoom down the road at excessive speeds and still keep good gas mileage. Jill Kimmell mentioned a Mercedes-Benz while Kelly Eaton talked about a Ferrari as being her dream car.

Other people preferred to stay in the country and dream about their American makes. TransAms were often brought up. Sophia Bett talked of a black turboed TransAm with a T-top as her dream auto.

Then there were the classic street machines. Such machines as the '70 Plymouth Superbird, the '65 Shelby Cobra, and the '67-'69 Camaro Super Sport or Z28 were mentioned as cars that car enthusiasts would like to have.

On a survey of Howe students and teachers, three out of five people wanted a foreign car, one out of five wanted a newer American make, and one out of twenty was the street machine enthusiast.

This poll reflects America's turn toward the foreign car industry and the smaller, more efficient cars.

Popular fashions for the sophisticated look include high-top boots.

Shoes for style

T oday's footwear is just as important as fashionable clothes, but the styles aren't made for comfort. They are designed to follow the styles of today's clothes.

For those who like the outdoor Western look, there are cowboy boots for both male and female. Boots come in assorted colors and can be worn with jeans, dresses, or even a tuxedo. "They go with anything I wear," stated Tony Poynter.

For the girls who want to have the sophisticated look there are the high-heeled, kneehigh boots. These are worn mostly with dresses. "They are fashionable, and they make me look taller," replied Tawn Parent when asked why she wore them.

Then there are the Docksides, which started on the college campus. These can he worn by both male and female. They are worn mostly with casual clothes but can also be worn when dressing formally. "I like them because I can wear them with a plaid skirt and socks," explained sophomore Amy Stewart.

Today's shoe styles may not be comfortable, but the shoe designers are keeping up with today's creative fashions.

What a drag

Getting up in the morning is a real drag for most people. The majority of us don't exactly look forward to rolling over and slapping the alarm clock off. Most of us are not bright-eyed and bushy-tailed the minute we wake up. In fact, most of us actually dread getting up in the morning.

On the other hand, some people, like Donna Lovelady, for instance, just can't wait to get up and go to school. "I woke up at 3:30 in the morning and thought it was time to go to school so I started getting ready and realized that I had two more hours to sleep."

The reason for reluctant reactions to getting out of bed is generally agreed upon by the student body. The number one reason is that it's nice and warm and cozy in bed and the rest of the room is cold. The second reason is that they have not done their homework or didn't study for a test at school. The third reason is that they're sick and tired of getting up early every morning.

Interestingly enough, students said that they didn't mind getting up on Saturdays simply because they didn't have to go to school and, of course, they could sleep later.

Different people have different ways of getting up according to how hard or how easy it is for them. People who don't wake up easily seem to find it easier if they put their alarm clock across the room from their bed. Then, when it goes off, they have to walk across the room to shut it up. This method seems to help them wake up easier than if they had their alarm clock right next to their bed because such a temptation is too great. It is so easy to reach over and drowsily turn off the alarm and go back to sleep or take more drastic measures. Brian Shinkle explains, "I broke my clock radio when I threw it across the room."

However, there are some people who don't have any trouble getting up and they don't have to mess with alarm clocks. They wake up on their own, mostly because of their routine schedule and self-discipline, every day at about the same time.

Whatever your reason and whatever your means, waking up is still a universal drag.

Puppy love?

eenagers hear their best friends say, "He doesn't know I'm alive" or "She'd never go out with me." Some may catch themselves saying, "I don't know who to ask to the dance." Most teenagers "fall in love" sometime during their high school years, some for three or four at a time.

Teenagers find themselves doing things that they normally wouldn't do when experiencing a "crush." The girl who has progressed past the looking stage may stutter when talking to the six-foot, dark-haired football player, while the guy who sits next to the 36-26-36 blonde (otherwise known as a "10") may continuously ask questions about the weather.

No one can really say how serious or infallible a crush is until he experiences it.

Hairstyles suit activities

A nything can go with today's hairstyles. The hair can be worn in many ways to suit the daily activities of a person. For the active person there's the wash and comb cut, which needs no curling or blow drying. There's also the look of short hair for the person who doesn't have time to comb it often. As Jim Stevenson states, "Short hair is easier to manage. Long hair just gets in the way.'

Then there's the look of creativity and long hair past the shoulders. The hair can be french braided, corn rowed, or twisted into many shapes. Decorations such as flowers, feathers, beads, ribbons, combs and barrettes can be added. "I like long hair because I can wear it in a lot of ways," explains Sharon Maxwell.

When Tom Becklehimer was asked why he wore his hair past the shoulders, he explained, "It has a lot to do with the music I listen to. I don't want to be mistaken for a punk rocker. If John Lennon did, it's good enough for me. I like it long."

Senior Tawn Parent finds the stairs a convenient place to study.

Teens study

Homework isn't a favorite pastime nor is studying, but it's something that has to be done by those who want good grades. The ways of studying may vary, however. Like most teenagers, Lori Baker has the talent of listening to music blaring in her ears while doing homework. Music or television helps to take some of the boredom out. Terri Suggs commented, "I do my homework right after school while watching my favorite soap opera on TV."

The most common place for doing homework is in the bedroom in complete privacy as Pam Archer mentioned. "I prefer to do my homework in my bedroom sitting on my bed with just the radio turned down low," she commented.

The student who wants privacy finds little out-of-the-way places to work. When Nannette Skaggs tried to work on yearbook copy at school, she concentrated best in the restroom or on the stairway.

Paula Wright finds that she can get her homework done in study hall so she won't have to take it home. Gisele Megnin finds doing homework by her locker convenient for the same reason.

It doesn't matter where or how students do their homework as long as it gets done. (DEBBIE ROZEK)

'Who did this?'

Y Kris Kringle decorated it for Christmas and I thought, 'Oh. God! This is embarrassing!'" commented Crystal Embry after she found her locker decorated. Kris Kringles are not the only ones who decorate lockers. Cheerleaders and Mat Maids decorate lockers of athletes. Others decorate them for a friend's birthday.

Nothing stands in the way of those who decorate lockers, not even an unkown combination. "I decorated the outside of it with wrapping paper because I did not have the combination," explained Debbie Taylor about decorating a friend's locker. If the combination is known, a victim might find balloons, stuffed animals, ping pong balls, or just about anything else inside his locker.

Many students feel that the time and effort they spend to decorate a locker is worth it. "It lets people know that you are thinking about them and brightens their day to know that their friends care," stated Karen Foster.

For all the effort, locker decorations do not last long. It is usually only a few days before that decorated locker becomes just another brown one.

(TOBI ELMORE)

Locker decorating is part of the fun that goes along with the Christmas season.

Skating stays in

Roller-skating is popular among Howe students. Skating is great exercise for the legs though most people don't skate for that reason. Julie Bankston says, "I roller-skate to see friends, meet new people and have some fun."

Most llowe skaters go to the Beech Grove Roller Dome, but other rinks such as USA and Roller Cave are also popular. With the new indoor/outdoor skate wheels people also skate on the street, in parking lots, or even in the house. Roller-skate prices vary. Buying tennis shoe skates means paying around ninety dollars. But since they have been around longer, a teenager can probably find some for sixty. Most of the money-getters are the things that go along with roller-skating such as disco socks, colorful visors, skate bags, head and wrist bands that light up in the dark, and many other frills.

Going to a skating rink once a week adds up. Most people find that roller rinks are expensive to get into and not worth it, though that hasn't affected skating popularity.

Most roller rinks provide a snack har, a rink, skates to rent, lockers, and a place for people to get together. Skating rinks act as hang-outs for some schools. In fact, some people don't put on skates when they go. Instead they sit and talk to their friends and enjoy themselves.

Roller-skating will stay popular because it is a fairly simple sport and roller rinks provide a place for friends to get together.

Lynch works at hobbies

Often mistaken for just another teacher at llowe, art teacher James Lynch is both talented and versatile at his work and hobbies.

With an undergraduate degree from John Herron School of Art and Butler University and a master's degree from Indiana University, Mr. Lynch has taught at Howe for I2 years.

Since Mr. Lynch tends to paint realistically, he favors the artist and art that is more objective and realistic. "However, I hope I appreciate all types of work," he explains.

Like most artists, Mr. Lynch has a favorite piece of work. He considers a large acrylic painting of three old gentlemen playing cards behind an old house his favorite. "I think I like that best because of the character of older homes and the fun of a good card game," explains Mr. Lynch.

Some of the more interested students often ask him for advice on what to do after high school. "I will try to be honest with my advice," he explains. "The art profession is a difficult field and only the most dedicated and talented should pursue it on a professional level," added Mr. Lynch.

For the art student who doesn't wish to choose art as a profession or career, Mr. Lynch stresses that everyone can find some area of art to develop as a hobby. "Art is definitely one of my hobbies," he commented. Although many talented artists sell their work, Mr. Lynch does most of his work for himself. Occasionally he does work on commission. His other hobbies include gardening and yardwork. Running is also a hobby for him, one with which he is very active.

Mr. Lynch became involved in running about three years ago after recovering from a broken arm. "I was overweight, out of shape, and didn't realize how sad my condition was until I tried to run around Howe's track and could only make it once. Then I decided I'd better do something," he explains.

Mr. Lynch tries to run six days a week from 45 minutes to an hour, usually after school. "It's refreshing to be by yourself for that hour and run off the tensions of the day," he says. Mr. Lynch finds that the best place to run is through the Irvington neighborhood. "I grew up in this area and it brings back many memories when I see those old haunts," he explains.

Although running is just a hobby, Mr. Lynch has even made it a challenge at times. He has attempted to run in six or seven races a year, usually six to ten miles. He has also finished two marathons, "I'm not very fast but I try to finish," he explains.

Besides just teaching, Mr. Lynch has also coached the freshman football team in the past and continues to assist the cross country team. When asked why he chose teaching as a career, he explained, "Where else could I find an occupation where I could work at my hobbies? I've always enjoyed art and sports and teaching at llowe has given me an opportunity to learn more about, participate, and share in my interest."

Howe proud to rate last

A school building needs living bodies, furniture, and school supplies like a lock needs a combination or key. Without them, neither could be opened.

In 1978 Harry E. Wood High School was closed because of low enrollment and costly repairs needed. Three years later it stands abandoned with little life left within it while the life that remains is slowly carried away.

On February 22, 1981, several flowe students, parents, teachers, and other volunteers entered Wood High School to remove some of the last evidence of the now non-existent high school while at the same time supplementing the needs of a high school still in operation and full of the hustle and bustle that once surged through the hall-ways of Wood.

As the movers entered the cold, damp, musty old building, a feeling of awe struck many of them. "It was awful to think that they could close a school just like that. It seemed like everyone just got up and left the building," explained Jim Doninger.

After three years of vacancy homework assignments, "Good luck next year," and good-byes were still written on the chalk boards. Many of the movers felt guilty, thinking they were contributing to the destruction of the building's last evidence of life. "I felt like a thief," commented Rusty Denton.

While walking down the empty hallways like scavengers, seeing empty classrooms and picturing scurrying students going to class, the movers thought, "One day Howe High School could be in this condition."

In November 1980 the school board founded the Indianapolis Public Facilities Task Force to determine which city high school would be closed the following fall.

The Task Force visited all I.P.S. high schools, giving their opinions and often criticizing the schools' physical and racial conditions. Howe patiently waited for its

In preparing for the Task Force visit many students and teachers put forth their strongest efforts to impress and express their desire to keep Howe open. Classrooms and hallways were cleaned spotless while "Howe Proud" signs were hung throughout the building with students' names and achievements to show there is more to a Howe student than just his cagerness to learn.

Finally on January 28, 1981, the Indianapolis Public Facilities Task Force entered Howe High School to inspect and critique its conditions. Butterflies fluttered in the stomachs of many students and teachers as various rumors were heard. "I heard a Task Force member say Howe is one of the schools that are going to be closed" and "They've already made the decision and this visit is just a formality" were heard among the gossip.

But that evening almost 1,200 students, faculty members, families, and neighborhood businessmen were soon to discover the thoughts that really existed in the minds of the Task Force.

This assembly was probably the most important one ever held at Howe High School. Supporters squeezed into the auditorium to discover standing room only.

As committee chairman Billie Stewart lifted the microphone and called for attention, the impatient chattering and restless moving in chairs came to a halt. The meeting was on its way.

The first speaker was announced and took his position at the podium. The faces in the crowd began to reflect the concern they felt for Thomas Carr Ilowe High School.

Many of the speeches given were centered around the Irvington area. "To fully understand Howe, one must begin with the founding of the city of Irvington in 1870," stated 18-year veteran teacher David Stewart in the opening of his speech. "It would not be impossible to load up all our students and transfer them to another high school in the city. It would be impossible, however, to transfer our history, our traditions, and our parent involvement," he concluded.

The following weeks, after the assembly, were full of wonder and anticipation for the Task Force's final decision.

Finally the butterflies began to fade as headlines read "Howe rates last on list." Never before has Thomas Carr Howe High School been happier to come in last.

New clubs encourage spirit

The 1980-81 school year welcomed many new clubs to Howe. Among them was the ping pong club. Although the group doesn't compete against other schools, they do compete against one another. In one tournament, player Kevin Yamafuji bad forgotten his paddle and had to use his geometry book. Much to his opponent's embarrassment. Kevin won.

Also added to the list of clubs was the Booster club. Members set out to support spring sports and give them the same attention as winter sports. But before spring sports get underway, the Booster members worked with the Howe Expansion Committee and student council to prepare for the Task Force. On January 21, club president Dana Parry represented the Boosters with a moving speech to keep Howe open.

The drama club started its first year with eager members. They have studied dance, puppetry and mime to hopefully prepare them for a career in theater. To polish their skills the members had planned to present a skit to the Task Force, but lack of space onstage prevented the showing.

Athletic director Rick Hewitt began sponsoring an Indian club to "encourage the needs and interest of Indian craft." Mr. Hewitt first became interested in Indian art through his early experiences in scouting. His interest continued to build as he enrolled in an anthropology course in college. The club didn't get the turn-out of members that had been anticipated but Mr. Hewitt commented, "We are still growing and building."

Chess defends state

The older media club sent its members to Ball State University for the Indiana Student Media meeting where they listened to numerous speakers. Plans for the future include a used book sale in April.

Varsity club had a good year. Events were planned early. Bowling, volleyball, skating, and selling hands with "No. 1" on them helped the club raise money to finance awards and medals for the athletes. Mrs. Rita Simmons commented, "Primarily, we are a group to support each other and support the athletic programs." Mr. James Hamner summed up the year by saying, "It's a super neat club."

The chess club started the year off well. Lots of practice paid off in the Greenfield Invitational Tournament when the A and B teams finished first and third out of 30 schools.

Although chess isn't an active sport, it does require a great amount of skill and concentration. Truman Cope felt that "Chess exercises your mind. It makes you think."

As defending champs, the chess team tried to become the first chess team to be state champions for three years in a row, a feat that neither North Central nor Arlington could achieve. Sponsor John Skene commented, "We have the strongest players in the state."

Artists provide murals

This year's members of the Naturalists club had planned mainly one major activity for the year nature photography. Under the guidance of sponsor James Narber students learned to use a 35mm camera and focused on nature and wildflowers. Mr. Yarber commented. "I wanted them to think about what would make a pretty picture."

Some people consider photography an art but the more noticeable art lies in the hands of the students involved in the art club. Sponsored by Mr. James Komann, the art club members attended the tenth anniversary of the art museum in September. Soon after the election of officers the promising artists began working on a mural of Irvington architecture for the teacher's cafeteria.

Achievers join clubs

Ruture Educators in Action achieved more recognition than some of the other clubs this year. The members entered their float in the homeeoming contest and claimed third place. The club had numerous activities but still stressed their interest in teaching.

The quiz team had a short term in competition. Students prepared four days a week for their fight against Lawrence Central but lost by two points on January 11 on Channel 13's "Brain Game."

Student business managers sold tickets at extraeurricular activities this year. The students also ushered and distributed programs at the musical. Clubs banned by school board...

Levery fall, freshmen begin their four years of high school. For some girls these four years are the wildest they'll ever experience. Aside from football games, parties and schoolwork they become involved in a close circle of students—a social club. Social clubs have been prohibited by the school board because they exclude some students from membership, but teenagers still find them appealing. Some girls join the clubs because of the urge to rebel against authority or the satisfaction of being with people their own age and forming their own values.

One of the most recognized parts of a private club is its pledging. Pledging isn't just dropping books in the hallway or barking in the lobby. Its purpose is to "make sure they want to get in." "During lunch," one pledger commented, "the older members made me take up their trays for a week and collect two hundred pennies."

But what are the girls pledging for? Donelz, Kittenz, Keyz, Trix, Trenz, Tawnz, Babes, Yargoh, and Emberz are the clubs that have aroused a lot of curiosity over the years not only from students but from authority figures too. Recalling his past experiences as a fraternity president, principal Frank Tout said, "Pledging was fun and we did mean things in college but clubs don't belong in a high school."

Social clubs have been a part of this school since 1951 when graduates from School 57 came to Howe and started a club called Trix. Basically the club was started so that the girls could have a social "get-together" and plan trips to Brown County and a "fancy tea" (which could be updated to mean a party). One of the first members of Trix, Mrs. Judy Strange, commented, "After 25 years those girls are still my close friends."

Trix members had had a smaller club called Bugz when they attended School 57. When they came to Howe, they decided their club would too. In 1951 the members of private clubs were all loyal to their club sisters and all rebelled against then principal Thomas Stirling for banning their club sweaters, much like the girls do now.

Until eight years ago there were boys' clubs like the Stepz, Blitz, and the combined club the Delta Zars. The male clubs were made up of mostly athletes and lettermen. Well-known members are Howe social studies teacher Dave Stewart, Perry Meridian football coach Phillip Strader, and Lawrence Central principal Richard Patterson. Local chiropractor Bob Bell commented on his years as a Delta Zar member, "We were known city-wide and we would join the girls' clubs from Tech and Manual."

New members are added to these clubs every year except in four-year clubs like Trix. The demand for private clubs has risen. Two clubs were added to Howe this year. "Club gives you a chance to do the things you normally wouldn't do by yourself," commented club members. "Someone brings up a subject at the meetings. Then we all add to it."

A possible member has to go through the two-week pledging where she is allowed to decline a different pledge three times. Then she attends an initiation ceremony in the late evening at a nearby park. There the teenagers are lined up and egged while honey is poured over their heads and into their clothes. The older members than help them to take a bath in the sandbox, roll down a hill and run in a mudslide. For this the teenagers become members. An Emberz member commented on her initiation, "I was scared at first until it happened. It's gross but you make it fun."

At Howe there is one club member to every ten students including boys. Boys are becoming more a part of these clubs as mascots because they no longer have a social organization of their own. Erick Bryd felt that "It's harder for boys to socialize with boys." Everlla Harris commented, "The guys think that the clubs are silly and just for girls."

ABOVE: Knowing that they'll be a mess by the time they're finished, teenagers dress in "grubbies" for the ceremony.

...Students rebel as traditions go on what is discussed at the meetings? "There is no gossip allowed," exclaimed one member. Some of the clubs have a constitution which prohibits the use of vulgar language, pot, cigarettes, and alcohol at the meetings. Dues of fifty cents are collected at the meetings for hayrides, parties and trips to King's Island while the goals of the club are discussed. A Trix member commented, "I brought up the idea of sponsoring a Victnam child."

But what happens to the girls who don't make it into the clubs? A Donelz ex-member commented, "A friend and I had gotten high before the meeting. When the others came, they got mad at us because we were high and kept laughing at them. The following school day some of the members came up and said, 'We're sorry but you're out.'"

When the state law prohibiting private clubs was rewritten, the state left out the part against private clubs but a school board ruling is still in effect. But students fail to see the reason of being suspended for wearing club sweaters. Some teenagers commented, "I don't like it at all. Others wear pot leaves and disgusting remarks on their shirts." "But," Mr. Tout continued, "the sweaters don't represent an organization sponsored by the school."

Sam Jones, secondary education assistant to the superintendent, commented that "I don't see why students have to have private clubs. There are enough school functions that cost the school a lot of money." But when asked why the state law prohibiting clubs was repealed on February 26, 1973, Mr. Jones stated, "I didn't know it had been dropped."

As legal consultant of the Department of Public Instruction, Mr. Jeff Zaring commented that "I couldn't really say when or why the clubs were first prohibited. It's such an old statute," "But," Mr. Zaring continued. "it's up to the school board now."

Some people tend to think that the clubs have become a popularity contest. But as one member put it. "I don't think people look at me and say, 'She's in Trix-she's stuck up.""

Mr. Tout felt that the clubs were a clique where all the members stuck together and considered other clubs rivals. "We have friends outside of club and we've thought of combining with another club," commented a member. "We don't separate ourselves from other students."

Mike Schlebecker felt, "Social clubs are a strong part of the school's community. It gives the members some identity which you need in high school." All during high school students gain recognition, but heing a member of a club seems to be the most significant form for many.

While clubs continue to add more members, senior club members will graduate each June and expect their club sisters to carry on the tradition of pledging, initiation ceremonies and the socializing that goes along with private clubs.

A'fun pain'

when I was asked to write this copy, I thought it would be an easy task. Well, it wasn't. I was struggling to write what this year meant for the HILLTOPPER staff. After thinking about it for an hour-or should I say a week-the words that came to mind to describe it were "a fun pain."

The fun came when the staff members came to Saturday work sessions for the first few weeks, met one another and worked on their assignments, talked of Friday's adventures, and played wastebasket basketball.

As the weeks rolled on, they worked together to meet their first deadline. But after the first comes a second, and this was where the pain began. The work became more challenging and some staff members realized it wasn't for them and flew the coop. But the rest of the team stuck with it and gave up their family, school, and social life.

The year ran its course and while problems arose so did deadlines. This was when the staff found out how much everyone needed each other. They worked harder together on weekends and after school. As the days passed, more work was ahead. Then the deadline hit and we weren't ready. We missed the deadline by a week. Again, after the second comes the third. Only prayers and midnight work sessions could help this one. But hopes were high and slowly but surely we worked and worked and worked.

As I sit here in this corner by room 240 writing this copy and pigging out on junk food, I watch the staff working on this last deadline and wonder if we will make it. I hear the typewriter and the radio and see the familiar sights of staffers playing wastebasket basketball and talking of Friday night's adventures. The fun is back but this time combined with the pain, a "fun pain."

Photographers stop time

Who or what gives viewers of magazines, newspapers, and let's not forget year-books, the opportunity to observe a split second of action, an emotional expression after a victory or defeat, or a picture of teenagers experiencing high school life? The answer? A photographer and his camera. But what ingredient causes a photographer to have the desire to capture these moments? For me it was fascination.

Before I got involved in photography, I thought of a photographer as just someone who walks around with a camera and clicks the shutter. Then I was asked to join the yearbook staff and one of my jobs was to photograph various sports and school activities. It wasn't until this time that I realized what photography is really about. It's not just snapping pictures. It's capturing a moment that not everybody notices because it happens too quickly or because they aren't aware of it.

But it wasn't only the camera's ability to capture unique moments that I was fascinated by. The process of developing the photograph itself also intrigued me.

Until I started photography, I was one of those people who thought a photograph was produced by taking it to a Fotomat or Kodak film processing store and having them do all the work. But this is far from how the yearbook photographs are processed. Each picture is printed by a staff photographer in a darkroom. This, I feel, is where the action begins. As soon as the printing paper is put into the developer, the image appears in a matter of seconds—an image that will last forever.

l, like many photographers, feel that photography is like eyesight. Without it we are blind.

Council motivates masses

the '80-'81 student council. Members were not only motivated to further leadership learning but they were motivated to show the school and community genuine concern.

Although Student Council sponsors numerous large-scale events annually, the little projects tended to be the most important to the group this year. One such project was the Christmas visit to the Eastside Healthcare Center. "It's the greatest feeling in the world to help other people," remarked Student Council assistant secretary Rebecca Sams, "especially since the elderly people at the nursing homes are so lonely during the holidays. I'm glad that Council cares about them."

Another meaningful Yuletide event sponsored by Council was the "candy-gram" delivery. By using funds from the treasury, Student Council was able to issue an additional 2,000 grams with special messages delivered to everyone saying, "You are a special part of Howe."

Student Council was also involved in the Howe Expansion Committee to keep Howe open. This task was even more closely related to the sincere concerns of the group according to junior representative Curtis Covington because "we are the only IPS high school that stresses the development of leadership and we're the only ones who even care to belong to the state and national organizations." Every summer the Howe student council sends several potential leaders to seminars and workshops. This is something that other city high school student councils have failed to accomplish at all.

This year the theme of Council was to "Motivate the Masses." These masses included Howe residents as well as community residents. As freshman class representative Mark Rubick remarked, "I've learned that motivation isn't just exciting assemblies and crazy dress days, but it's also caring to search for those people around us who are not involved to help make them feel needed too."

more coming festivities were more enthusiastic and exciting than they have been in many years. For a week before the homecoming game there were many tests of how much spirit and support the student body had for its team. There were days of dressing in brown and gold, sweats, clothes that clashed, 60's fashions, and formal attire.

Friday's excitement began when the drummers marched down the halls leading people out of their classes to the north gym. A coffin with an unknown occupant inside was carried into the gym behind the drummers and was laid down in front of the microphone. Next all of the fall sports teams were introduced. Then the fun began. The male sexy legs contest title was claimed by Tom Ililton and the sophomores were victorious in the ice cream eating race. Suspense built as everyone wondered who was in the coffin.

The intensity rose as the seniors lined up to form a tunnel. Then, like a bolt of lightning illuminating the sky, the screams and cheers filled the gym and made the bleachers shake as the varsity football team ran through the tunnel and made their presence known.

football jersey, took over the mike and claimed that Cathedral, his alma mater, would be victorious over Howe. It was at those words that the coffin lid opened and Mr. Jim Arvin came out with a pie and landed it in Mr. Vollmer's face. The football team carried the loyal Irishman away.

For the grand finale a little pig was run around the gym squeaking and squealing. With five minutes left, master of ceremonies Bill Gavaghan gave the crowd of students the choice of going back to elass five minutes early or sereaming and yelling for five minutes. Of course, everyone screamed and yelled for five full minutes straight. After that everyone filed out of the gym cestatic but reluctant to go back to classes.

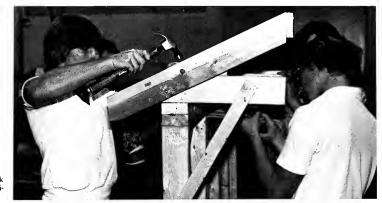

Later on that night at halftime of the foothall game Nancy Janes was crowned homecoming queen. After the game there was a dance in the north gym where Brian Shinkle was crowned king. The turnout was not as good as some would have liked it to be, but there were enough people there that everyone had a good time.

Homecoming festivities were more exciting than they have been in a long time.

In March 1980 juniors and seniors headed for Washington, D.C., where they toured the Capitol and saw all the operations of the White House, Previous international relations and world civilization classes had already toured New York with sponsors Gerald McLeish, Errol Spears, and Ron Finkbiner.

The students and teachers hoped to learn more from these trips than they could in a classroom.

This year juniors and seniors planned a trip to Canada. The sponsors chose Canada as this year's destination because it is a foreign country. Mr. Finkbiner commented, "We're going to tour Canada and learn more about its history,"

Students going on the trip sold W & W's for weeks, making up the difference from their own pockets. Although selling was a lot of trouble, Patti Oleksy commented, "I would definitely do it again."

School a 'prison'?

Towards the end of the first semester, director of guidance John Trinkle was asked what he thought the students were feeling about their school life. His only comment was, "I wish I knew," Connselors started off the year not really knowing what to expect from the students. Although enrolment was down considerably, teachers and counselors were more concerned with the students who did attend school. From past experiences Mr. Trinkle did feel that students "feel that school is a prison. School isn't as important to them as it used to be, If we could get kids to help us make this school a better place to learn, then we could do our jobs as we're supposed to."

Feds beat 'Gnats'

In many ways the Howe mock elections follow the real ones. Both have parties, conventions, posters, and candidates who want to win

The Howe mock elections started in the 1940's to familiarize students with the political system. They include social studies classes where students are divided into Nationalist and Federalist parties. Anyone in a government class can run for a state or local office.

Posters and buttons were evident as students started campaigning for office. The Federalists printed stickers that said "Vote Fed." The Nationalist candidates gathered in the lobby the day before the election, passed out buttons and told the people to vote Nat. Federalist Michele Hawkins, who was running for treasurer, came up with the best campaign slogan. Taking the Nationalist nickname of Nats, she asked if students wanted to be governed by a "a small winged fly whose mouth is furnished with bristly stings that inflict irritating wounds."

People run for office for different reasons. When asked why he ran for superintendent of public instruction, Nationalist Mike Moore responded. "I think I ran for that because it seemed like a challenge and the job itself seemed interesting." Others ran just for the fun of trying to get elected.

This mock election was the first one in eight years where the Federalists won a majority of the state offices. The Federalists won all but three of the state offices. The election was close with most candidates winning by less than 10 votes.

In the real elections, the Republicans had a good year. Republican Ronald Reagan was elected President by defeating Jimmy Carter, who was running for his second term as President. For the first time in 25 years the Republicans won a majority in the Senate.

The surprise in the election of 1980 was John Anderson, who ran for President as an independent. With strong backing from supporters, Anderson made a respectable showing in the election.

Even though the election of 1980 offered voters three different candidates for President, apathy was evident among the voters. Only 54% of those eligible bothered to vote on November 4.

Good to be bad?

S ix weeks of rehearsing and building sets were what it took to prepare for the opening of the musical "Dracula Baby."

The musical was presented twice in July and again on November 1. According to director Tom Lewis, it was repeated basically for economic reasons and because it was appropriate for Halloween.

The audience reacted well to the musical. especially to Luke Hale's performance as Dracula. The cast thought Luke gave a professional performance.

One of the most exciting parts was when the nurse, played by Lynette Enz, tried to show she could overpower Dracula. She picked him up and flipped him on his back. There was tension in the air as the audience wondered if Draeula was all right.

Each character participated in at least one song. The favorite song of the viewers was "Good to Be Bad" sung by Mike Booher and Luke Hale.

Putting the play together wasn't a very difficult task. As Mr. Lewis explained, "It was easier than most shows to get into because of the sterotyped characters."

Cast repeats musical

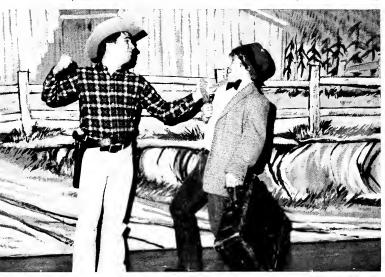

In March 19-21 students and parents entered the large auditorium to hear the familiar sounds of "People will say we're in love," "Kansas City" and "Oklahoma."

Originally presented on April 24, 1964, "Oklahoma" was the first musical ever staged in the Howe auditorium and the first musical to be repeated.

Students in the music department spent long evenings and weekends singing, acting and going over the many special dances for the show. In a cast of unforgettable charactors, Annette Layman played the sweet, naive Laurev who is in love with the macho Curly (played by Rusty Denton). Ileidi Preuss played the motherly Aunt Eller. The hardest to play was Jud Fry. Senior John Davis brought out the lowly feelings of Jud, who lives in a dingy little shack and leads a hermit's life.

On the night of the final performance the enthusiastic cast and crew were filled with the usual tears. However, commented music teacher Robert Bramblett, "They are thrilled that they have accomplished something because these kids may never get the chance to experience this again.

Buses cause havoc n the spring of 1980 the band found In the spring of 1900 and director. The band parents held the group together until Paul Nordby was appointed director early in the summer.

Mr. Nordby had his hands full planning and finalizing a big job ahead band eamp. To take 108 people including chaperones to camp for a week is a big job, especially when you're the man in charge. The band gathered on August 4, 1980, for their trip to band eamp held in Evansville, Indiana. Before departing, the band encountered its first problem, their luggage. In the process of loading the luggage, they found to their surprise that it wouldn't all fit. Solving this problem, they loaded it on a passenger bus. What they didn't know was that the bus had a fuel pump problem and would go no faster than 45 miles per hour.

On the journey towards Evansville another of the three buses suffered a broken brake line. After being repaired, the same bus encountered a tire blow-out which left the passengers sitting beside the road for several hours.

it was very obvious to the campers that they had missed the evening meal which had been served at 6:00 p.m. Compromising, they settled on McDonald's for dinner.

Mr. Nordby's marching styles were a great shock to many of the older band members and Hornet Honeys. With a busy schedule and temperatures above 95, many members were contemplating about their future with the band.

After the marehers had sweat through a full day's work, Mr. Nordby spent many late hours rearranging the show. He also found time to practice his bassoon and help the Hornet Honevs and the flag girls.

After eamp the band held rehearsals for their upcoming contest at Bush Stadium. Performing their halftime show, they received a second division rating and tied for first for wind solo.

After football season there was just enough time to learn pep band music for the basketball games. Pep band, although not required, added spirit and excitement to the erowd.

Honeys help spirit

hanges" would be a good word to describe the Hornet Honeys. For the first time the Honeys not only danced at the half-time shows but they also carried flags with the band. The ties between the band and Honeys were strengthened during this season. Together they competed at the annual band contest at Bush Stadium. As usual the Honeys went to camp at Vincennes University and participated in the pompon competition. The Honeys competed in the evaluations and won Superior Ribbon, which is the highest honor that any group can win at camp.

If you asked a Honey why she is a Hornet Honey, she might say, "because I wanted to help support Howe's sports and take part in some activity to help the school's spirit." As Cindy Vie says, "Being a Honey has helped me to know myself better."

Practice pays off

People have heard that hard work and practice pays off. For the orchestra this was certainly true. As conductor Miss Mable Lewis explained, "If it's a good concert then it's worth it."

This year's orchestra of 40 members was larger than last year's 36. Since there was more balance of instruments, it sounded like a full orchestra. Symphony music with contrast and color along with barder rhythms made the orchestra more challenging.

The string ensemble was busy with concerts at the City Market around Christmas and playing for the Task Force January 28.

As usual Howe was represented well with seven all-city members.

Dreams come true

This year was not a normal one for the flowe vocal ensemble. As in past years they attended their seven madrigal feasts, the annual Christmas program and several choir contests. But definitely highlighting the events of the year was the opportunity for them to back up Barry Manilow on November 12.

For most of the people this was a dream come true. The chance to sing in front of a sell-out crowd at Market Square Arena is elhout crowd at Murket Square Arena is enough to put butterflies in anyone's stomach. On top of that they were backing up Barry Manilow, whose reputation as a superstar made them so nervous that a few of the ensemble members forgot some of their lines.

Although the group had practiced the music for nearly two months, they met Manilow for the first time on the day of the concert and rehearsed on stage only once. When it came time to sing, the pressure was really on them to do their best. They apparently did that, receiving glowing reviews in the papers the next day.

Singers work hard

This was a year of hard work for the music department. Because of declining enrollment the singers had to work harder for perfection.

The group traveled in many directions throughout the city to show their talents. Trebleaires performed at nursing homes, churches, the Education Center, and other public places around the community. They also made an effort to visit junior high schools, where they showed that Howe has a fine music department and hoped to recruit for next year.

Other than the busy schedule, choir director Tom Lewis had no complaints except that "this was the first year we had to dig for people interested in choir."

Boys add spirit

If you attended any of this year's basketball games, you probably noticed a few new faces along the sidelines. This was the first year for the Howe basemen cheerleaders.

The addition of the basemen added a lot to crowd spirit, but getting started was pretty difficult. "We didn't know just what to do with them at first," explained Debbie Hurst. It was a real challenge to incorporate the boys into the routines since they had never done that sort of thing before.

The basemen were outfitted with brown cords, gold shirts, and megaphones. Mrs.

"Even though some people might put us down, I'm really proud of the basemen," said Duane Butrum. "We've learned a lot about responsibility and cooperation."

Aside from working with the basemen, the cheerleaders planned several pep assemblies which they thought the students enjoyed very much. There seemed to be more crowd spirit and all of the cheerleaders felt they did a good job of keeping it going.

Girls get new sport

No one is ever pleased with a losing season but you have to start somewhere." These were the words of coach Charles Pirtle when speaking of the girls' softball team.

There were as many strong points of the team as weak. Demonstrating aggressiveness against Chatard, the squad came from behind to tie in the seventh inning and win in the eighth with the final score 11-10.

Bright sports of the team were MVP Lisa Ransom, leading hitter Angie Lee, and pitcher Vicki Cunningham.

The team ended the season with a 3-9 record.

Players show promise

A strong effort from the pitchers got the varsity baseball season off to a good start.

The squad won five of its first six games and expected an excellent season. But with sprained ankles, loss of players during midseason, and lack of power hitters, the season ended with a 10-15 record.

Most valuable player Monty Hammons led the team in both pitching and batting average. Keith Branham led in RBI's. Kenny Jacob, Jim Turner, and Rick Weaver were outstanding on defense.

With only seven returning lettermen, inexperience was a problem but young players like freshman D. J. Waterman and sophomore Kevin Long showed promise for the future.

The reserve and freshman baseball teams were affected by the same problems as the varsity team. They were both plagued by inconsistent hitting and mental errors. As a result the reserve team ended with a 7-12-1 record and the freshman team ended with a 5-9 record.

Both teams had strong pitching and defense. Reserves John Fagan, Robbie Jacob, Bobby MacKenzie, and Freddie Neat were outstanding on defense. Freshman standout Ted Addair pitched a three-hitter against Scecina. Reserve pitchers Craig Guhl and Jim Stevenson showed promise.

Sheets reaches regional

S enior captain Jeff Sheets led the boys' golf team for the second season in a row. He became the first Howe golfer in six years to qualify for the regional.

Sheets, number one player for two years, shot a 77 which was four strokes from the state tournament.

All of the golfers were capable of shooting good scores, but their 4-9 record didn't show their full potential.

"Everybody thinks golf is boring and easy," commented Ron Parry, "but it's the hardest game because it's 90% mental. The way a golfer feels before a game can affect the way he plays. It's a challenge because you're not competing against other people. You're competing against the course."

Coach Vollmer felt proud of his team for their effort and support of one another. He thought that "even though we got beat, winning wasn't necessary. The purpose was to do the absolute best you can."

Tennis lacks numbers

Individual achievements and spirited teamwork highlighted the 1980 girls'

There were several new, inexperienced players on the team. The squad started out with twelve players and dwindled down to nine because of minor problems. Coach Al Wright said, "Even when it looked like the team was falling apart, those who hung in there stuck together."

Individual awards were given to Celeste Boulais (most valuable player), Mary Lumsey (captain), Julie Bankston (best mental attitude), and Nannette Skaggs (most improved). Mary Lumsey, the only returning letterman, led the 1980 team by coming in second in the city finals.

Youth hampers team

Plagued with inexperience, the boys' tennis team did surprisingly well by coming in fourth in the city and finishing its season with a 10-10 record.

The team was built around key player Jeff Johnson. Also contributing a great deal were Kipper Mimms and Peter Boulais, who was undefeated city champ at number three singles. Outstanding freshman Greg Abella played on the number one doubles team.

Girls break records

I t was a season of hard work and breaking records for the girls' track team. "We had better quality and hard workers," stated coach James Perkins. The result was record-breaking times and distances. Records were set by Rhonda Thomas in the mile and half-mile, Cheryl Craig in the hurdles, and Geowanda Britton in the high immo.

Strong points weren't hard to find on the team. The 400 meter relay team were state champs, and freshman Roxie Davis was one of the top 100 meter sprinters in the state.

The girls ended the season with 12 wins and only one loss and placed ninth in the state. They captured the Southport and Tech invitationals, took second in the regional and city, and won the sectional.

Mr. Perkins was happy to say that except for graduate Cheryl Craig all the girls will be returning to the 1981 team.

Davenport wins state while most of the track team was running around their average, Howe's star hurdler Robert Davenport ran a record-breaking 14.2 to qualify him for the state meet. At the state he won the high hurdles, becoming the first state champ from llowe in over fifteen years.

Marcus Cole ran an impressive 9:32 in the 3,000 meters and also qualified for the state. Coaches Richard Harpold and Bill Gavaghan remarked that the team would have been better if some of the experienced runners had stayed out for track. However, the team was left with many young but promising runners and had depth in both distances and sprints.

These young runners brought the varsity to a 6-7 record and the reserves to a record of 10-2. The reserves finished second in the city.

Golfers keep title

One wrapped her club around a tree. One walked into a flying ball. One almost got sued for hitting mud on the windshield of an oncoming car. One got in a rumble during a match. A couple messed up their score cards and almost all of them shot into the parking lot. Who are these good sports? They are the Howe girls' golf team of 1980.

Despite slight mishaps and minor difficulties the team had a great season. They hit number one when they beat Marshall, Ben Davis, and Broad Ripple to claim, once again, the city championship title.

"Team balance and accumulated experienced players," stated coach Joe Vollmer, were the reasons why the team improved their record so much this fall. The only problem the team ran into was the hard schedule that they were matched up against. Even so, they had a record of nine wins and four losses, almost double the total number of wins in the past three seasons.

Captain Gwen Zander, who was on the team all four years of its existence, said about the team, "It is the best this school has had in a long time, not only in playing but in getting along with each other."

Debbie Mead had the single lowest round with 48. Gwen Zander, Debbie Mead, and Jennie McAtee had the best average scores but coach Vollmer added that "everybody chipped in."

Runners win city

Recruiting" and "rebuilding" are the two key words in girls' cross country. Cross country takes a kind of girl who can meet the physical demands of the sport, doesn't mind sweating a little bit, and can stick with it year after year.

This year was no exception for the girls' cross country team. Injuries and family commitments prevented them from having a complete team until midseason. This was the main factor contributing to their 2-5 record.

Captain Rhonda Thomas led the team for the second year in a row. Sophomore Cecilia Gallagher was a great surprise by running second for the team. Julie Wilkinson and Michele Hawkins provided steady support while freshmen Donnell Dale and Janice Smith rapidly improved.

Everyone's times peaked in the regional, making it the turning point of the season. Winning the first official city championship, however, proved to he most rewarding. Four of the six runners placed in the top ten.

Rhonda Thomas, runner-up in the city, went on to compete in the state meet at Indiana University.

Even though the season was harder than last year, it still proved successful.

Luck runs out

D etermination, hard work, and proper coaching marked the 1980 cross country team.

This season's team looked like they could win the city title in the first few meets. Jeff King lost only once in dual meets and everyone ran his best time. But injuries to lettermen Kipp St. John and Kenny Cole and the increased distance of three miles limited their ability to accomplish their goal.

Excitement was at its height at the Howe-Cathedral meet, when the team won for the first time in three years. Howe's top five runners, Jeff King, Tony Poynter, Curtis Childs, Stan Clark, and Dane Gambill, tied for first. Coach Bill Gavaghan commented that his five top runners were stronger than in past years.

Randy Ramos worked hard to make the varsity his freshman year. Randy showed his talent best when he came in runner-up in the freshman division in the city meet.

The cross country team completed their season with a satisfying 7-4 record.

Sport

lacks interest

et down under the ball!" It was the same thing over and over for the girls' volleyball team. Coach Betty Woods repeatedly stressed fundamentals with the inexperienced team. The team made foolish mistakes until they realized that communication on the floor is necessary.

Volleyball was one of the first sports for girls, but Ilowe has had only one winning season. Lack of interest in the sport has caused fewer to try out. The 1980 team had little height and was made up of mostly freshmen and sophomores. According to coach Woods, juniors Angie Lee and Vicki Glover were the most consistent players on the two squads.

The varsity finished with a 5-12 record and the junior varsity finished with a 5-9 record.

Football loses 10

hat can you say about a losing season? The varsity football team finished winless against a tough schedule, one of the toughest in the state, with two opponents going undefeated during the season and making the play offs.

Lack of size and inexperience in the offensive line were some of the problems that plagued their season. There were morale problems during the year as some of the team members fought among themselves, but the problems didn't last long.

Even though the team had difficulties, there were high points. Senior team captain Ted Wadsworth contributed greatly to the team effort. He became the third-best punter in Howe's history and earned honorable mention on all-city and all-state football teams. Carl Mimms, also breaking school records, placed second on the list of Howe receivers.

In spite of a losing record the team's prospects looked better at the end of the season with an easier schedule for next year and many underclassmen with playing time.

Reserves do well

Quickness and lots of it was the strong point of the freshman football team. The squad was also skilled in the backfield and had a well-rounded offensive team. "When this happens it results in players working well together and having good team spirit," pointed out coach Eric Hougland. "But one of our weaker points was that we didn't have the size of other teams and they just outsized us."

On the next level, the reserve team was just the opposite. They had size and strength but lacked team speed. Without speed on the team they had to work with their size and strength. Their offensive and defensive lines blocked and tackled well against tough teams.

The freshmen played well throughout the season and finished with a record of five wins and three losses.

The reserves also played well, especially at the end of the season. They improved steadily through the year, winning three of their last four games and finishing with four wins and six losses.

Prospects look good

Not even SAT's could stop the 1980 girls' swim team from sweeping the first city swim meet. They accomplished this task while five seniors, including the two team captains, were at llowe taking the test. Pulling the girls through to the victory was the great strength of the underclassmen.

This was a good recruiting year. Of the seventeen team members, eleven were brand new swimmers. Because of the numbers and because these underclassmen pushed to their limits, the girls had their first winning season in the team's short history. This record, 8-7, showed their ability.

Senior captains Kathy Coleman and Hayley Sams led the very young team through this season. Under their leadership and the teaching of first-year coach Lynn Huber, a Crispus Attucks teacher, many individual team records were broken. Freshman standout Shannon Dunlap smashed two existing freestyle records. Ruth Beck, also a freshman, broke the record in backstroke. Sophomore Tanya Benefiel crushed the record in the individual medley.

Prospects looked good because all of these record breakers were underclassmen. (JIM DONINGER)

Hale wins city

S enior diver Luke Hale was the standout of the 1981 boys' swim team. Luke won the city championship and broke several records.

Unfortunately, the team consisted of only twelve members, making it very difficult to fill up all the events of a meet. Inexperience and lack of depth led to a 3-5 record. However, six returning lettermen, led by Jim Doninger, David Starr, and Bryan Wright, all cut their times.

The highlight of the season was beating Hamilton Southeastern for the first time. (SHIRLE) ROGERS) ad luck plagued the 1980-81 girls gymnastics season. With a larger team to compete, practice beginning early in November, and former Howe and I.U. gymnast Cathy McAtec coaching, the results should have been rewarding. Instead the season ended with an 0-10 record.

The team might have ended with a losing season, but they did work hard and brought in some high scores. All-around gymnast Amy Stewart scored above average on most routines.

"This year may have been a building one but next year we'll be a better team," predicted Amy Stewart.

Boys have tough season

Jobs. grades, injuries, and lack of gymnasts were the main reasons for the boys' gymnastics team's 1-7 record. But set aside their disadvantages and what's left is a lot of dedication. The team practiced long hours throughout the season.

Senior Brian Branham's first year aided the team's scoring while second-year gymnast Tom Strange's experience contributed also.

"I think we did a good job even though the season was a bit tough," remarked Tom Strange.

Grapplers have winning season

With a great deal of effort, sacrifice, and determination, the 1981 wrestling teams overcame many tough opponents and finished their seasons with very successful records.

On the varsity level, the team emerged with six wins, three losses, and one tie. The high point of the season came in the first meet of the new year against arch-rival Beech Grove. Coming down to the last seconds of the final match, which was won by a single point, Howe pulled through with a 31 to 30 victory. This was the first time in five years of competition between the two teams that Howe defeated this highly talented team.

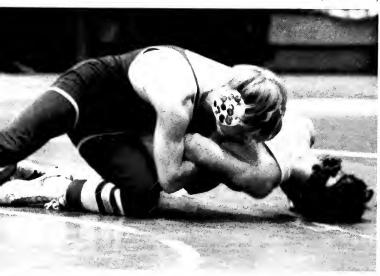

Although Howe did not place well in December, during the city wrestling tournament, the Hornets were able to defeat many good wrestlers in the sectional and qualified nine men to compete in the regional tournament in January. The varsity team captured fifth place at both the Carmel and Warren invitationals, which involve the top teams in the state.

Coach Jim Arvin feels that Howe faced the toughest schedule in the city, so he was proud to say that the team was undefeated in the second half of the season.

Two of this year's most outstanding wrestlers were senior Robbie Jacob and sophomore Phil Ochs. At 112 pounds Jacob placed first in the city and sectional tournaments and qualified for the state finals. Ochs, who wrestled at 105 pounds, entered the sectional with a 7-10 record and advanced as far as the semi-state. There he was one of only five sophomores in the entire tournament.

Placing well in several tournaments this year was senior Bill Bell, who placed second in the sectional and third in the regional at 138 pounds. Coming through with a big upset, senior Brian Shinkle defeated the city champ at 155 pounds to place second in the sectional. Other seniors who helped lead the team this year were Bob MacKenzie and Terry Slider. (CONTINUED)

Record numbers try out

Success came only after weeks of grueling three-hour practices, testing the determination of each member of the team. Unfortunately, the demands which accompany success took a heavy toll on several of this year's wrestlers. During the second round of the city tournament, junior Scott Sherrill sustained a hand injury which required plastic surgery and put him out for the rest of the season. Sherrill's record had been 10-3 prior to the city, making him one of the team's top wrestlers.

The junior varsity team concluded their season with a very successful 8-2 record. Bill Smith was very pleased with his first year as a wrestling coach and felt that he had learned quite a bit about the sport. "There is a strong feeling of camaraderie among the wrestlers which comes from their common effort and sacrifice," he stated.

Lacking any previous experience in wrestling, the freshmen produced a surprising 8-1 record. The team placed third in the freshman city, and for the first time in freshman history they defeated top rival Mooresville. Coach Jerry McLeish felt that his team had gained much experience which will prove invaluable next season.

The 1981 wrestling season brought many promising aspects to an increasingly popular sport. For the fifth consecutive year over 115 students came out for the team, and a record 57 completed the season. There was also a record turn-out for mat maids this year.

With such large turn-outs, the coaches look forward to more good seasons.

Girls lack leader

Lack of a dominant player plagued both the varsity and junior varsity girls' basketball teams in the 1980-81 season. The junior varsity team seemed to be able to work around this major problem by concentrating more on their defense than their offense. By using full-court pressure and a good zone defense, the team came off the courts at the end of the season with a 10-7 record without a single "star" on the team. We kept them from shooting all right," commented JV coach Rita Simmons.

The 7-13 varsity team had a bit more trouble than the JV team. The varsity team concentrated more on controlling the boards. Varsity coach Otis Curry explained, "Towards the end we were very dominant on rebounds. We were pretty big."

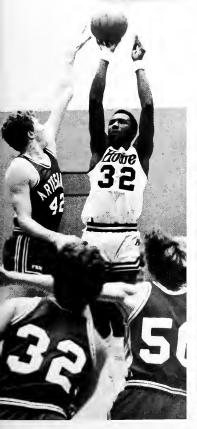

Both coaches worked on fundamentals and tried to give their underclassmen playing time. Prospects for next year looked very good as three freshmen were starting on the varsity team at the end of the season.

(JENNIFER TROUT)

Hornets rank 4th

Whether it was tiredness, an off-game or the possible fact that they were outplayed, no true Hornet fan can fault the varsity basketball team for not trying after they lost in the final game of the 1980-81 Indianapolis semi-state tourney.

As a matter of fact, no one can really criticize this squad at all. This team produced llowe's best-ever record, 26-3, and the school's best showing in the state tournament. Even the non-basketball fans can be proud to have gone to the same school as this team.

According to coach James Thompson, this year's team found its strength in wellbalanced scoring and the depth of the bench. Scoring honors went to junior Greg Cheatham and senior John Jointer. As for the depth, Howe found solid strength in at least the top eight men.

The Hornets received their first recognition as a state contender only five games into the season, when they defeated last year's state champs, Broad Ripple, 72-70. But the next game proved less joyous for Howe as Southport handed them a 60-59 loss.

Following this loss, Howe went on an 11-game winning spree and was soon found ranked third in the state. Included in this spree were first-place finishes in the Carmel Invitational and the city tourney. Howe captured its first city title since 1966 by deteating Chatard, 77-73. But the streak was soon snapped in a heart-breaking 72-71 overtime loss to Washington, a team that Howe took a back seat to for most of the season.

Bouncing back from this loss, Howe won the next ten outings before being stopped for the final time in the finals of the semistate by a strong Shenandoah team, 57-49. At the close of the regular season, Howe owned an impressive 20-2 record and a state ranking of fourth. The Hornets then took these impressive credentials into the Southport sectional where they defeated Southport, 87-65, to claim their second title in the last three years.

Following the sectional, Howe advanced to the Indianapolis regional championship game by beating Marshall in the first round, 46-40. In the final, Chatard kept up with Howe until the final few minutes of the game before the Hornets pulled away to win their first regional title since 1964.

In the semi-state, Howe whitewashed Columbus North, 61-36, in the first game before falling to Shenandoah in the championship.

quickness and strong shooting were the prevailing strong points for this year's reserve basketball team. Several players scored in double figures in each game. Unfortunately, weak ball handling and lack of size along with never having played together as a squad were problems that they faced.

The freshman team was well balanced with an average winning margin of 11 points over 'their opponents and a strong defense that held some teams to scoreless quarters.

Good offense and a solid defense led the freshmen to the runner-up spot in the city. Coach Greg Mingus commented, "Rebounding and consistent scoring was the main quality of the freshman team."

BOYS' VARSITY BASKETBALL Scores on page 175.

question in his drafting class.

This year was a challenging and rewarding one for the Howe Hornets. Fortunately, with the help of those who care, Howe remains open.
